

James M. Peterson – Boeing Commercial Airplanes Group

Title: Air Ducting Requirements and Design

Air ducting on commercial transport aircraft must meet regulatory requirements involving flammability. In addition, there are operational requirements involving weight, cost, manufacturability, durability, porosity, strength, flexibility/stiffness, and compatibility with other components and systems that must be addressed. This paper will cover current technology and possible future trends.