

Since October 1999, Judith Murawski has worked as an industrial hygienist with the Association of Flight Attendants-CWA, AFL-CIO (AFA), a labor union that represents 50,000 flight attendants at 22 US airlines. She works primarily to address occupational chemical exposure hazards in the aircraft cabin, including engine oil fumes, pesticides, and deicing fluid. She has a Master of Science in Occupational Hygiene from the University of British Columbia (1995) and is certified by the American Board of Industrial Hygiene (2000). She lives in Seattle.