

Richard N. Walters has a BS in Chemistry from the Richard Stockton College of New Jersey and a Ph.D. in Fire Science from the University of Central Lancashire. He has worked in the Fire Safety Branch of the Federal Aviation Administration since 1995 as a contractor and federal employee since 2006. Richard is responsible for developing new test methodologies and evaluating materials for fire performance and other properties. He has over 50 publications in scientific journals and conference proceedings, one patent, and has won several awards for his research.